With respect to the statement given, I wish to believe that the Parlour's previous location was in an area which had better reach. This is probably because it was located in a residential area where there is a potential of many women and children visiting it regularly. Currently, the auto repair shop is doing good business in the same location because of the same factor – easier reach. We can validate this assumption with the last statement – “its former location is a better site”. Here, the point of discussion comes down to the profit made by both the businesses. The profit is influenced by a major factor like reachability. Customers would prefer visiting a place closer to their locality.

Although this assumptions sounds very sensible, Jenny's business could have come down because of their below average service. We do not have any information on their current location and so, we cannot blindly believe what is given the newspaper statement.
